Summer storms a-brewin'?

Weather. Sask. sees similar conditions to 2012 early in season

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

Saskatchewan could be in for another stormy summer as 2013 is seeing a lot of the same conditions that contributed to a hectic storm season last year.

Saskatchewan's own tornado hunter, Greg Johnson, said that while it's always hard to predict severe weather so far in advance, there are some consistencies between this year and last that suggest the province could be in for a stormy season.

"I'm sure that we're going to see some tornadoes, and severe summer thunderstorms are nothing new to the Prairies — those happen every year — but certain conditions need to be in place to make those summer storms tornadic," Johnson said.

"It looks to me at this point we have a lot of similarities between this (pre-)summer so far … and what we had last year."

"If that continues, given the fact that we had lots of tornadoes last year, I'd say we're going to have an above-average number of tornadoes this year. However, that's kind of looking into a crystal ball."

Johnson said some of the similarities include high amounts of moisture in the ground, a humid surface layer of atmosphere and strong jet-stream support, all of which are needed for severe weather.

John Paul Cragg, a warning preparedness meteorologist with Environment Canada, said a number of factors, such as moisture, varying atmospheric temperatures, consistent low-pressure systems and wind shear, are needed to produce severe weather, and because there are so many variables, it's difficult to predict.

"You need all four of these elements to come together, which makes it very hard to predict what a season is going to be like," Cragg said.

"You can have a fairly accurate prediction about — and even that's debatable — what the next three months will be in terms of precipitation and temperature. But will we be in a pattern where low pressure systems are passing over us? That's a tough one."

Already had one

Saskatchewan has already seen at least one tornado, as The Weather Network recently posted video on YouTube of a twister touching down near Maple Creek on June 2.

A massive supercell thunderstorm rolls through Saskatchewan last July 22, during the 2012 summer of storms. Greg Johnson, Saskatchewan's own storm chaser, said the 2013 storm season has a number of similarities when compared to last year's severe summer weather. CONTRIBUTED/GREG JOHNSON

Weekend shooting.
Teenager accused of attempted murder

A 15-year-old boy has been charged with attempted murder after a shooting on Saturday morning in the 200 Block of Avenue N South.

A release from the Saskatoon Police Service says officers received a 911 call that gunshots were heard coming from the area of 21st Street and Avenue N on June 8. It was reported that an unknown male had fired multiple shots from a rifle and the shots struck two apartments, breaking two windows, one on each.

The apartments were occupied at the time of the shooting, but there were no injuries and police say they recovered a firearm at the scene.

The suspect faces a number of charges including attempted murder, wilful damage under $5,000 and several weapons offences. METRO

Valkyries beat rival Riot in Prairie showdown

Saskatoon holds off a late Regina surge; will play Lethbridge in WWCFL final

The Saskatoon Valkyries are heading to the WWCFL finals after eliminating their provincial rivals, the Regina Riot, on Sunday afternoon, taking the Prairie Conference championship title.

The Valkyries dominated the first half of the game, shutting down the Riot and scoring 41 points.

"We just weren't ready at the start and that kind of killed us. They got a jump on us and it's tough to come back," said Riot head coach Darren Fisher.

The team did come back after halftime, scoring 20 points in the third quarter and another seven in the fourth.

"We kind of rolled the first half, and they scared the heck out of us in the third quarter but we pulled it back together in the fourth," said Valkyries head coach Jeff Yausie.

The 55-27 final score ends the season for the Riot, who have now missed out on the title for the past three years.

"We showed good heart and I was very happy with the girls — they played their hearts out in the third and fourth quarters," Fisher said.

With the big win under their belt, the Valkyries will play the Western Conference champions, the Lethbridge Steel, next Saturday at Mosaic Stadium for the WWCFL title.

The Valkyries have held that title for the past two years, beating out the Edmonton Storm in 2011 and the Steel in 2012.

"For us it's really big to win our rivalry with Regina," Yausie said. "But now we have to prepare as much as we can in the week for Lethbridge."

High hopes placed on kite festival for Saskatchewan fame

Swift Current. Roughly 10,000 expected to soak in the province's wide-open plains and sky

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

Kite enthusiasts from across North America and the world will soon be descending upon Saskatchewan for the ninth-annual SaskPower Windscape Kite Festival in Swift Current.

Shann Gowan, cultural festival co-ordinator with Windscape, said organizers are expecting roughly 10,000 people at this year's event, which runs from June 22 to 23.

She said that with roughly half the audience coming from outside Swift Current, the event is the perfect time to put the province on display.

"We've got big blue skies, rolling plains and lots and lots of wind, so it's a nice way to celebrate that and show it off to the world," Gowan said.

She said the festival will showcase scores of unique kites, ranging from massive pieces of flying art to the tight flying manoeuvres of stunt and sport kites.

Though the festival got off to a slow start nine years ago, Gowan said it's definitely taken off in recent years.

"It's just a matter of getting people to know what a kite festival is. Once they've come, they'll be committed and they'll come back again."

The festival runs from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days. While there is an event schedule, most are wind permitting.

Prime kite-flying country

"Kite festivals are big in Asia and Europe, but it's not as big in North America, so this is a unique opportunity for us to celebrate the things that make Saskatchewan special."

Nelson Mandela.
Anti-apartheid leader battles grave infection; in serious condition

Nelson Mandela received visits from family members on Sunday at a hospital where the former president and anti-apartheid leader was being treated for a recurring lung infection, while South Africans expressed their appreciation for a man widely regarded as the father of the nation.

There was no official update on 94-year-old Mandela after his second night in the hospital. His condition was described as "serious but stable" on Saturday.

The office of President Jacob Zuma had said that Mandela was taken to a Pretoria hospital after his condition deteriorated at around 1:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The anti-apartheid leader has now been taken to a hospital four times since December, with the last discharge coming on April 6 after doctors diagnosed him with pneumonia and drained fluid from his lung area.

Mandela was freed in 1990 after 27 years as a prisoner of white racist rule and won election to the presidency in all-race elections in 1994. He retired from public life years ago and had received medical care at his Johannesburg home until his latest transfer to a hospital. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Harkat can have cellphone but no Internet, feds say

The federal government says it will allow an Ottawa man accused of terrorist ties to have a cellphone but balks at giving Mohamed Harkat access to the Internet or removing his electronic tracking bracelet.

The government says it is also open to dropping a requirement that Harkat, 44, get prior approval before travelling out of town.

The concessions fall short of the full list of freedoms Harkat will seek Tuesday during a one-day Federal Court hearing.

It has been more than a decade since Harkat, a refugee from Algeria, was arrested under a national security certificate on suspicion of being an al-Qaida sleeper agent. He has essentially been living under house arrest with stringent conditions for seven years. Harkat, 44, lives at home in Ottawa with wife Sophie, but wears an electronic GPS bracelet on his ankle and must check in with authorities regularly.

Harkat denies any involvement in terrorist activities. He says his decade-long ordeal has taken a toll, and that he's been treated by a psychiatrist for anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder and insomnia for the last three years.

Canada celebrates decade of same-sex marriage

Ten years ago, their unprecedented wedding stood for hope, equality and inclusion.

A decade later, Michael Leshner and Michael Stark — Canada's first legally married same-sex couple — believe the battle to have their union recognized by the courts has made it easier for today's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Canadians to feel accepted.

"Once you have marriage you have full equality. That was won that day," said Leshner.

The pair's quick civil ceremony in Toronto came just hours after Ontario's Court of Appeal pronounced the Canadian law on traditional marriage unconstitutional on June 10, 2003.

While Ontario was the first to legally recognize same-sex marriage, many other provinces followed soon after. Two years later, the federal government legalized same-sex marriage countrywide with the gender-neutral Civil Marriage Act. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Verizon story source outed at his own request

The Guardian. Ex CIA employee Edward Snowden, 29, said his motive was to 'inform the public'; NSA seeks criminal investigation

A former CIA employee and National Security Agency contractor is the source of The Guardian's disclosures about the U.S. government's secret surveillance programs, the British newspaper reported Sunday.

The leaks have reopened a debate about privacy concerns versus heightened measures to protect against terrorist attacks, and led America's NSA to ask for a criminal investigation.

The Guardian said it was publishing the identity of Edward Snowden, 29, a former technical assistant for the CIA and current employee of defence contractor Booz Allen Hamilton, at his own request.

"My sole motive is to inform the public as to that which is done in their name and that which is done against them," said Snowden.

The NSA has been collecting the phone records of hundreds of millions of Americans. President Barack Obama has said the programs have been authorized by Congress and are subject to supervision. "What I can say is that in evaluating these programs, they make a difference in our capacity to anticipate and prevent possible terrorist activity."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His background

Edward Snowden said that he lacked a high school diploma and enlisted in the U.S. Army.

- After leaving the army, he got his foot in the door with the NSA working at a covert facility.
- He then worked for the CIA in information technology. By 2007, he was stationed in Geneva.

Journalism. U.S. state snooping story prompts debate on source protection

A scandal over state snooping on journalists in the United States is prompting media-watchers to consider new techniques to protect sources.

Anonymity of sources is considered sacrosanct among journalists and essential to their safety, reputation, and ability to act as public whistle-blowers.

But journalists are lagging behind when it comes to protecting sources in the digital era, critics say.

"There is a general lack of awareness (among journalists) about what ubiquitous surveillance looks like," said Jonathan Stray, who teaches at Columbia University. Everything from the websites you visit, the calls you make, and even your phone location are logged somewhere, Stray said. The same applies to reporters. Whistle-blowers are at particular risk. A week ago, The New Yorker unveiled Strongbox — a secure way for people to leak information to them.

Defence survey to shed light on silent crime

Results of an anonymous survey to be released in the fall by National Defence will shed more light on the extent of military sexual assault, including what has been called the silent crime of male-on-male rape.

Almost 68,000 troops, 86 per cent of them men, were asked last year to voluntarily complete the Canadian Forces Workplace Harassment Survey. It asks their gender, years of service and rank, along with 100 questions ranging from personal harassment to whether they've been raped. It's the first such survey since 1998. Results could provide valuable insight into the extent of sexual violence in the Canadian military — an issue that former soldiers and others say is rarely reported. The extent to which men are sexually assaulted by other men is even more cloaked in silence, they say.

STANDING ON THE EDGE OF A KNIFE

URBAN COMPASS

Hilary Nelson
saskatoon@metronews.ca

Saskatoon stands upon the edge of a knife.

Exhausted from re-inventing the wheel on recent civic issues such as recycling, we are now wrestling with the demons of road maintenance and civic unsightliness.

Not to mention the skirmishes over whether sprawl could possibly be a bad thing, and to what degree taxes inhibit prosperity. At our current rate, we should have them solved by about 2060 or so.

If I may be so bold as to make a suggestion — perhaps we should cast our gaze farther afield, to other cities.

Let us start with Calgary, a beacon of civilization some of you may have heard of. Recently, Calgary has spanned the mighty river that divides it, much like Saskatoon, with a glorious bridge. Oddly enough, no cars are allowed on the bridge! Not even an ambulance! It's all very curious.

And they have painted the thing red.

This will never work in Saskatoon.

Red is associated with the twin pillars of preposterous government, Communism and the Liberals.

Plus we know from our experience with the Traffic Bridge, painting bridges is a waste of time.

One wonders exactly what stage of prosperity Calgary has calcified in.

Next we shall find out that they are using seventeenth-century technology such as railways to move people around. Alas, it appears that there is not much to be learned from Calgary.

Perhaps their enlightened neighbour to the north, Edmonton, may have a solution. A light-rail-transit line expansion? Next.

We simply cannot afford the eccentricities of Edmontonians.

While Winnipeg is a known location of labour unions, there may still be hope yet from our Manitoban neighbours. Bike lanes? Heated bus shelters? Horrors! And what's this? They're buying out a public-private partnership produced police station? The city claims it will be cheaper to own outright over the long run. Have they lost their minds?

Regina, finally a model of free-market Saskatchewan sensibilities. The RM of Sherwood has embraced the spirit of competition and proposed a development of more than 10,000 people adjoining Regina.

The Queen City will be forced to step up its game and provide more services at a lower cost to prevent citizens moving en masse to Wascana Village.

Due to publishing constraints our analysis is brought to a close. Saskatoon is a unique jewel, set in the heart of a potash brooch. A little learning from other cities is a dangerous thing. New ideas can go horribly wrong. We wouldn't want to be wrong, would we?

Our city, the jewel

A little learning from other cities is a dangerous thing. New ideas can go horribly wrong.

It's a paws-itive story. One woman's home is animal rehabilitation facility

News worth sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate people, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one:

On any given day, Jan Shadick's house resembles a menagerie — its inhabitants are animals in peril.

Shadick, a licensed wildlife rehabilitator, says her connection with the wild developed some time in the "pre-verbal memory."

Growing up, she says, a rescued animal always seemed to find refuge in her family's home.

So it seemed like destiny when she started Living Sky Wildlife Rehabilitation a few years ago.

Today, as a registered charity with one permanent employee and 35 volunteers, Shadick has rehabilitated everything from crows and raccoons to kingfishers, coyotes and even a porcupine.

"I had to put on about five layers of clothes to learn how to feed him!" says Shadick, who recalls pulling quills out of her clothes for days after.

Shadick, a full-time family therapist, calls her operation a "hobby," which she manages outside of work hours.

She is also its main volunteer. If you are interested in helping, email info@livingskywildliferehabilitation.org. To make a donation, visit: livingskywildliferehabilitation.org.

iRadio music service, iOS update expected at Apple conference

San Francisco. New look for iPhones, iPads could be most radical design change to mobile software since 2007

Apple is expected to reveal a digital radio service and changes to the software behind iPhones and iPads on Monday as the company opens its annual conference for software developers.

Apple hasn't said what it will unveil at the Worldwide Developers Conference in San Francisco. But the major announcements are expected during Monday's keynote presentation. Last year, Apple used the conference to announce its own mapping service, better integration with social networks and improvements to virtual assistant Siri. It also announced thinner MacBooks with high-resolution screens. The conference runs through Friday.

This year, Apple is expected to show off a simplified look on iPhones and iPads. If the speculation is correct, it would be the most radical design change since the iPhone made its debut in 2007, showing consumers that phones could do much more than make calls and exchange messages.

This week's event comes at an important time for Apple. The company's stock price has fallen amid concerns that another breakthrough product isn't imminent. Although CEO Tim Cook has said people shouldn't expect new products until the fall, Apple is likely to preview how future products will function in its unveiling of new services and features.

Monday's highlight is expected to be an updated version of iOS, the software that runs iPhones, iPads and iPod Touches. It will be called iOS 7 and will come with new devices expected to go on sale this fall. Owners of recent models such as last fall's iPhone 5 will likely be eligible for free upgrades.

- Observers think Apple will debut a music-streaming service dubbed iRadio, and that it will be most similar to Pandora, an advertising-supported service that plays songs at random within certain genres for free.
- However, the Apple service is expected to feature a seamless way for listeners to purchase songs through iTunes.

Federal agency stops investigating deadly anthrax

Canada's food regulator is no longer getting involved in cases of anthrax, a disease that can kill cattle, bison, other grazing animals and, in rare cases, people.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency says it will no longer investigate and quarantine anthrax-infected farms, collect samples for testing, vaccinate livestock or oversee and help pay for the cost of disposing animals that die of the disease.

New rules that went into effect this spring say livestock producers, with the help of private veterinarians, are expected to take responsibility for preventing and dealing with anthrax.

Anthrax is caused by naturally occurring bacteria in spores in soil. The spores can become active during hot weather that follows heavy rains or flooding. Animals that ingest the spores can get sick and die very quickly. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Strombo brings style to CNN

Network sea change.
New mandate and management has the purveyor of American news looking to branch out into new territory

It's a safe bet that George Stroumboulopoulos will be the first male CNN personality to wear two earrings and a skull ring from a designer who made one for Keith Richards.

Stroumboulopoulos, whose new nighttime talk show premiered Sunday, is more curious than dangerous, though.

The show gets a solid time slot for its debut, airing after the season finale of Anthony Bourdain's successful Parts Unknown. Then it will settle into a regular spot on Fridays at 11 p.m. Eastern for the summer and, if things go well, maybe beyond.

This is part of CNN's attempt to branch out beyond news programming at certain times, represented most prominently by Bourdain's show. The effort started before the arrival of new network boss Jeff Zucker — Stroumboulopoulos had his first contact with the network last summer before Zucker arrived — but the enthusiasm continued with the change in management.

Stroumboulopoulos already hosts a nightly talk show on the CBC, where his friendly style seems to encourage celebrities to open up.

"I hope that people pick up something new about the person I'm interviewing and find out a way to relate to them," he said. "I want them to find a connection."

For CNN, the show represents an old style for a new generation. Stroumboulopoulos, 40, said his interest in politics was fuelled less by politicians than by listening to the Clash and Public Enemy. He's eager to interview Snoop Lion, the former Snoop Dogg, on his show because he considers him such an important figure in hip-hop.

Rap artist Wiz Khalifa, comic Martin Short and actor Keanu Reeves were the guests on his first show.

Other confirmed interviews for the show's 10-week run include Betty White, Bill Maher, Sharon Stone and filmmaker Werner Herzog.

The show will tape before a studio audience in Los Angeles. Stroumboulopoulos said he's not gunning for the job of CNN's other general interview program, Piers Morgan, and said he likes the way Morgan conducts interviews.

For the moment, he'll fit the CNN show in with a schedule that includes the CBC show (which airs twice in the evening) and a weekly music and talk program he does for a CBS radio station.

"This is what I do," he said. "I don't even have any dependents in my life. I don't even have a plant."

What's in a name? A lot of money, apparently

Scarlett Johansson is suing over the use of her name in The First Thing We Look At, a French novel by Gregoire Delacourt, according to the Hollywood Reporter.

The book features a character first believed to be Johansson until it is later revealed she is a look-alike.

Johansson is seeking compensation and damages for "breach and fraudulent use of personal rights," and she's also seeking a ban on "future transfer of rights and adaptations of the book."

Delacourt, for his part, is "stunned" by the suit and says he chose Johansson for the story because she is the "epitome of beauty today."

Women who have kids and work full time have been found to have better mental and physical health by 40. ISTOCK

A recent survey found women who worked full time outside the home after having children had better mental and physical health by age 40 than those who had not.

This has of course raised interest, as one might assume that working full time while managing a family would be more stressful, and stress is a known factor in contributing to mental and physical challenges.

It would appear that this isn't necessarily accurate. Why would this be?

Personally, I'm not entirely surprised by the findings. I think Albert Einstein had stay-at-home moms in mind when he defined the word "insanity" as "doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

Have you ever been at home with young children? Have you tried to get them to clean up their rooms, pee into the toilet or stop hitting their sister?

No matter how many times they are told (clearly it is not "nagging" when it is simply giving them excellent advice), the outcome is often the same.

Nothing changes. At least not immediately, and not without years of bribing and threats.

Add to that the fact that my research (I drove around a bit) shows that there isn't a big list moms can carpool to at the end of the day in order to check off: a) continued successfully raising child, b) ensured food was edible and in good portion size and c) minimum health standards were met.

Many moms at home just don't get to feel that sense of accomplishment that comes with actually moving something forward and affecting change. Not in the short term, at any rate, and one of the most distressing things a parent of young children can hear from parents of older children is that it "never gets easy."

There's no such thing as a performance review when you're on the home front: except for the ones you get from snarly teenage girls who aren't necessarily focusing on your positive attributes, as the ones in a professional work environment might. Unless, "You suck" is now a good thing in the way that "that's so sick" has become. (I do try.)

The reward system for moms at home also leaves something to be desired. In that there really isn't one, except for the playground high fives you exchange with a friend when your kid wasn't the one kicking someone else off the slide.

Compare this to the workplace, where most employees can expect to be treated with a modicum of respect, have performance reviews which don't include door slamming (to be fair, there aren't any doors in most cubicles), and best of all, they get to take on new responsibilities with the positive achievement of old ones.

Being relieved at duties you've perfected is something moms at home never get to experience. Until the kids are the ones to leave home, that is.

Preventing unplanned pregnancy at any age

LINDA CLARKE
Metro World News in New York

There are around three million unplanned pregnancies every year in the U.S., and though it's an issue often associated with teenagers, a proportion of women this happens to are older, and some are married.

So, Dr. Hilda Hutcherson, a Columbia University Medical Center professor of clinical Obstetrics and Gynecology, gives us a refresher course on our options for making sure a baby doesn't catch us by surprise.

Birth control pills

You can still take them well past your teen years, Hutcherson says. "It's a safe option for women of all ages. Initially, when it was first passed, it was recommended for women until age 30, then it was age 35, but now most women can safely use it right into their 40s until they reach menopause."

Condoms

"Condoms work great if people use them consistently and right from the beginning of intercourse. The female condom is wonderful. I thought it was going to be popular, but it's large and makes slurping noises during sex. The newer ones are less noisy, but it's not caught on."

IUDs

They're convenient and have undergone major improvements, Hutcherson says. "Women stopped using IUDs because of infections, which caused infertility. But modern ones are smaller and improved. Even young women who haven't had children can use them."

The morning-after-pill

"This should only be used in emergencies and not relied on as a form of contraception," Hutcherson says.

Kicking it off once the cap comes off

The parties, the pictures, and now, a profession? How to get your game face on after graduation

Graduating can be exciting ... and a little nerve-racking. Looking for job leads? Try networking with industry professionals. ISTOCK

For post-secondary graduates receiving degrees and diplomas in the weeks ahead, excitement over completing their programs may be tempered by the grim job landscape for Canada's young people.

The latest labour force survey from Statistics Canada revealed a decline of 19,000 jobs for youth aged 15 to 24 in April. The youth unemployment rate was at 14.5 per cent last month, little changed compared to a year earlier and more than double the national average. "When you see numbers like that, it can often give you the impression there really aren't many jobs available in your area," said Shirin Khamisa, a Toronto-based career counsellor and founder of Careers by Design.

"Be very realistic and realize there is a general climate where there are less jobs, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to secure a job that's right for you."

Khamisa and other experts share three ways for job-seeking grads to distinguish themselves in a competitive job market and work toward kick-starting their careers.

Build a network

Do you have any professional contacts in your area of study or field of expertise? If not, there's no time like the present to start making connections. Attending industry events, joining a professional umbrella organization or engaging with individuals working in the field to ask about key needs in their area — and how you can fill them — could help build your network, said Khamisa.

"That's the really powerful thing in a job search when it's a tighter market — to get that face time with people who are in the field you'd like to work in." Another good way to obtain information and build a network is through informal interviews, said Bruno Castilloux, manager of career services at the University of Ottawa. He suggested researching the company of interest to craft precise questions before calling to speak briefly with a representative to learn more.

Keep connected

While many people will be keen to "jump right into job-search mode," Khamisa said that's not the best way to start a relationship with a potential contact. Khamisa said the job search should be a time of exploration. It's often easier when individuals are initially seeking out information and learning about a particular industry and the needs of an organization before hunting for a specific position, she noted. "Reaching out and connecting takes courage ... and I guarantee you there will be times where people don't get back to you or are just too busy or aren't receptive," she said.

"But the magic happens when you persevere and you keep going. And eventually, you will connect with a group of people who will help you and support you as you move forward." Khamisa added she once had a client who developed 10 contacts through cold calling. She continued to keep in touch over several months and ended up getting three different job offers. Placing a phone call isn't just limited to maintaining professional contacts.

When individuals reach the stage where they're submitting applications, a followup call is another way to show initiative, said Danielle Bragge, a partner with The Headhunters, a Canadian recruitment firm. It doesn't have to be aggressive. The process can be as simple as an introduction, mentioning your interest in the opportunity you've applied for and highlighting three quick reasons you'd make a great addition to the team, Bragge said. "When we do get those calls, I tell you, it takes the resumé from the bottom of the pile to the top of the pile." Bragge said while most resumés are directed to human resources, it's worthwhile to make the effort of placing the call. "It may not go anywhere, but it's the difference between great and ordinary. The thing that amazes me is how few people do that ... even your solid business professionals."

Go digital

- Many organizations use social networking sites like LinkedIn for recruitment purposes, but Khamisa said establishing an online profile can offer added benefits.
- Beyond fostering connections, job seekers can be exposed to professional groups who convene online, she noted.
- In many fields, social media and other tech-related skills are becoming increasingly necessary for doing an effective job and working efficiently, Khamisa said.
- She recommended observing how others in the field are making use of digital tools as a key first step. Bragge said those with an existing online presence — such as a Facebook page — should ensure that they "clean up" their social media profiles because prospective bosses could be watching.

Well-oiled machines to clash in Stanley Cup final

NHL playoffs. Bruins and Blackhawks made short work of their opponents in conference finals

Two franchises, rich in history, talent and star power. Two winning teams that know what it takes to bring home the Stanley Cup. Intrigue, in the form of a schedule that kept them away from each other for an entire season.

Oh, there's plenty to love about this series.

The Stanley Cup final kicks off Wednesday night when the Chicago Blackhawks host the Boston Bruins in the first finals matchup of Original Six franchises since Montreal beat the New York Rangers in five games way back in 1979.

The mighty Blackhawks, winners of seven of their last eight games, have a deep roster that really found its identity when pushed to the limit by the Detroit Red Wings in the second round. Then there are the playoff-tested Bruins, who rolled over favoured Pittsburgh during an impressive sweep that gave them a chance for a second NHL title in three seasons.

Unfamiliar foes

Due to the lockout, there were no interconference games this regular season.

- The Bruins and Blackhawks haven't played each other since Oct. 15, 2011, when Boston won 3-2 in a shootout in Chicago.

It's gift-wrapped in a bow for a league still trying to recover from a bitter lockout that wiped out 510 games and pushed the start of the season back to Jan. 19.

"It's a special couple places, the tradition of the Bruins and the Hawks is special," Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville said. "I'm sure, you know, the rivalry could return instantly come Game 1. I think it's good for the league. It's good for hockey. Two great hockey markets. We're very excited to be a part of it."

Chicago advanced with a 4-3 double-overtime victory over Los Angeles on Saturday night, using a hat trick from Patrick Kane to eliminate the defending champion Kings in five games in the Western Conference final. Back in the Stanley Cup series for the first time since 2010, the Blackhawks are in search of another title to pair with their six-game victory over the Philadelphia Flyers three years ago.

"Everyone has that drive to win the cup," Chicago forward Andrew Shaw said. "It's going to be a long road ahead here. It's surreal. I've wanted this since I was a kid. I'm excited to get started."

Boston is rolling again after losing its spot atop the Northeast Division in the final days of the regular season. The Bruins have won five in a row and nine of 10, boosted by a familiar group of stars who led the way when they won it all in 2011. David Krejci scored four times in the Pittsburgh sweep and leads Boston with nine goals and 12 assists in the playoffs. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Heat rise to the occasion vs. Spurs

LeBron James overcame a terrible start to finish with 17 points, eight rebounds and seven assists and the Miami Heat rolled to a 103-84 victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Sunday night to even the series at a game apiece.

Mario Chalmers scored 19 points for the defending champion Heat, who trailed late in the third quarter before going on a 30-5 run to take control. Chris Bosh added 12 points, 10 rebounds and four assists.

Danny Green scored 17 points on 6-for-6 shooting and Tony Parker had 13 points on 5-for-14 shooting with five assists for the Spurs, who turned the ball over 17 times after tying a finals record with only four in their Game 1 victory.

Game 3 is Tuesday night in San Antonio.

Dwyane Wade added 10 points and six assists for the defending champion Heat, who were down 62-61 with under four minutes to play in the third quarter and in danger of falling into a serious hole in their bid to repeat.

Tim Duncan had nine points and 11 rebounds, and Kawhi Leonard had 14 rebounds, including eight on offence, for the Spurs, who shot 41 per cent. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Try to realize that not everyone thinks or feels the same way as you. A clash of viewpoints is likely today but it will only be a problem if you insist that you are right and others are wrong.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may prefer to stick with what you know and trust today rather than take a risk on something new. That's up to you, of course, but it's also a shame because a little bit of courage could change your life completely.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Keep telling yourself that the changes now taking place are not nearly as bad as some people claim. As a matter of fact they could actually be beneficial, for you anyway, so make sure you have a positive attitude.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You are not as conformist as some people think and what you do over the next few days will prove that fact several times over. Expect a bit of a backlash though.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to give too much away today, especially on the work front where knowledge is most definitely power. The less others know about what you are up to the more likely it is your efforts will be a success.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
For some reason you are a bit more aggressive than usual, which could lead to confrontations at home and at work.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It's time to get serious about your long-term aims and that means, inevitably, getting rid of certain short-term aims that eat up your time and your energy.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The planets will smooth your path as the new week begins and you will find it quite easy to get your way both in the professional sphere and in your private affairs.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Try not to let little things annoy you today because if your temper gets the better of you there is no telling where it might lead. Whatever other people might say or do treat it all as a big joke.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If a commitment of some sort is not working out then maybe you should cut your losses and get out. It won't be easy but let common sense (and the contents of your wallet) guide you.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Some things can be put off indefinitely because they are not really important but you have been putting off something that MUST be forced through to a conclusion. Make this the week when you finally crack it.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Yes, all things are possible but don't get silly and change things for the sake of it today — chances are you will just have to change them back again later. SALLY BROMPTON
